The region of Alentejo (means Beyond the Tejo, which is the longest river in the Iberian Peninsula), is perhaps the least visited area of the country by tourists, and it still keeps its balance with the rhythm of nature. If you want to experience authentic Portuguese history, culture, cuisine, and nature, Alentejo is the place to go. From a rugged coast it is filled to the east with farmland, cork oaks, olive trees, vineyards, traditional villages, medieval ruins, castles, walls, towers, and fortresses. Its capital Évora is known as a "city-museum" and designated as a UNESCO World Heritage Site.
